These courses are designed to provide students with a comprehensive understanding of mental health issues, therapeutic techniques, and the ethical considerations involved in counseling. Typically, these courses cover a range of topics, including but not limited to developmental psychology, abnormal psychology, therapeutic modalities, and counseling techniques.

Students often learn about various counseling theories, such as cognitive-behavioral therapy (CBT), person-centered therapy, and psychodynamic approaches. This experiential learning is crucial, as it helps students develop the confidence and competence needed to work effectively with clients.

The structure of these courses can vary, but they generally include a combination of lectures, seminars, workshops, and practical training. The aim is to prepare students not only to understand psychological concepts but also to apply them in real-world settings.
